YOUR CARD AND REFLECTION PROMPT

THE RULER
Structure with room to breathe

USEFUL QUALITIES
Creating order, taking responsibility and coordinating shared efforts.

POSSIBLE SHADOW PATTERN
Overcontrolling details or treating uncertainty as something that must be eliminated.

A FAMILIAR MOMENT
You organise a shared task so carefully that others have little room to contribute their own approach.

A PERSPECTIVE TO CONSIDER
Reliable structures can reduce confusion and help people work together. They work best when responsibility is clear and those affected have a voice. Flexibility does not have to mean abandoning standards.

WHAT MAY NEED MORE ROOM
Trust, collaboration and permission not to know may need space alongside competence.

FINDING A BALANCE
Distinguish essential agreements from preferences. Decide which decisions can genuinely be shared.

REFLECTION QUESTIONS
1. What am I responsible for here?
2. Which detail could someone else approach differently?
3. What would fair, flexible leadership look like?

ONE SMALL EXPERIMENT
Agree one clear outcome with someone, then leave room for them to choose how to approach their part.

A PHRASE TO KEEP
A useful structure leaves room for people.

CONNECTING THIS WITH EVERYDAY LIFE
Taking responsibility can become tiring when delegation feels risky or every detail seems important. You might want to explore perfectionism, flexible thinking and assertive communication, including how to agree responsibilities, ask for help and leave room for someone else’s approach.
